Program Overview and Curriculum

The Creighton University Internal Medicine Residency offers a comprehensive three-year training program that prepares residents for board certification and clinical excellence in internal medicine. Designed to balance inpatient and outpatient experiences, the curriculum integrates didactic learning with hands-on clinical practice. Residents develop expertise in managing a wide spectrum of adult diseases, emphasizing patient-centered care and interdisciplinary collaboration. The program adheres to Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education (ACGME) standards, ensuring rigorous evaluation and continuous improvement.

Educational Philosophy

The program's educational philosophy centers on fostering lifelong learning and critical thinking. Residents are encouraged to engage in evidence-based medicine and quality improvement projects. The curriculum incorporates regular lectures, case conferences, simulation training, and clinical skills workshops to enhance medical knowledge and procedural competency. Emphasis is placed on professionalism, ethical practice, and communication skills essential for effective patient care.

Curriculum Structure

The residency curriculum is structured to provide progressive responsibility across the three years. Year one focuses on foundational clinical skills and broad exposure to various subspecialties. The second and third years allow for increased autonomy, elective rotations, and leadership opportunities. Key components include:

- Core inpatient rotations in general medicine wards, intensive care units, and subspecialty services
- Outpatient continuity clinics to develop longitudinal patient care skills
- Didactic sessions covering pathophysiology, diagnostics, therapeutics, and healthcare systems
- Procedural training in areas such as central line placement, lumbar puncture, and thoracentesis

Clinical Training and Rotations

Clinical experience is a cornerstone of the Creighton University Internal Medicine Residency. Residents train in diverse settings, including academic hospitals, community clinics, and specialty centers. This variety ensures exposure to a broad patient demographic and a wide range of medical conditions.

Inpatient Rotations

During inpatient rotations, residents manage acute and chronic illnesses, participate in multidisciplinary rounds, and coordinate care with consultants and allied health professionals. Rotations typically include:

- General medicine wards
- Medical intensive care unit (MICU)
- Cardiology and pulmonary services

- Infectious disease and nephrology units

Outpatient Clinics

Outpatient training emphasizes continuity of care and preventive medicine. Residents follow a panel of patients in the primary care clinic, managing chronic diseases such as diabetes, hypertension, and heart failure. This setting enhances skills in patient education, chronic disease management, and coordination with community resources.

Faculty and Mentorship

The residency program benefits from a dedicated faculty comprising experienced internists, subspecialists, and clinician-educators. Faculty members are committed to resident education, mentorship, and professional development. They provide personalized guidance to foster clinical competence and career advancement.

Mentorship Opportunities

Residents have access to formal and informal mentorship programs that support academic growth, research involvement, and wellness. Faculty mentors assist residents in identifying career goals, securing fellowship placements, and developing leadership skills. Regular feedback and evaluations ensure continuous improvement and personalized learning plans.

Research and Scholarly Opportunities

Creighton University encourages residents to engage in scholarly activities that contribute to medical knowledge and improve patient care. The residency program offers resources and support for research projects, quality improvement initiatives, and academic presentations.

Research Support

Residents can collaborate with faculty on clinical and translational research, benefiting from access to institutional resources and statistical support. Opportunities include:

- Participation in ongoing clinical trials
- Quality improvement and patient safety projects
- Presentations at regional and national conferences

- Publication in peer-reviewed journals

Application and Selection Process

The application process for the Creighton University Internal Medicine Residency is competitive and seeks candidates with strong academic backgrounds, clinical aptitude, and a commitment to internal medicine. The program participates in the Electronic Residency Application Service (ERAS) and the National Resident Matching Program (NRMP).

Application Requirements

Applicants must submit the following materials:

- ERAS application with personal statement
- Medical school transcripts and USMLE/COMLEX scores
- Letters of recommendation from clinical faculty
- Dean's letter (MSPE)

Interview and Selection

Selected candidates are invited for interviews that assess clinical knowledge, professionalism, and fit with the program's values. The selection committee evaluates applicants based on academic achievement, clinical performance, communication skills, and potential for growth.

Resident Life and Support Services

Resident wellness and work-life balance are prioritized within the Creighton University Internal Medicine Residency. The program fosters a collegial environment that supports mental health, professional development, and social engagement.

Wellness Initiatives

Residents have access to wellness resources, including counseling services, stress management workshops, and peer support groups. Regular social events and community activities promote camaraderie and resilience among residents.

Support Services

The program provides academic support, career counseling, and resources for board exam preparation. Additionally, faculty advisors assist residents with fellowship applications and job placement.

Career Development and Alumni Success

Graduates of the Creighton University Internal Medicine Residency have a strong track record of success in clinical practice, fellowship training, and academic medicine. The program's emphasis on comprehensive training and mentorship prepares residents for diverse career paths.

Career Pathways

Alumni pursue careers in primary care, hospital medicine, subspecialty fellowships, research, and healthcare leadership. The residency's broad clinical exposure and scholarly opportunities enable graduates to excel in various healthcare environments.

Alumni Network

The program maintains an active alumni network that offers ongoing professional connections, mentorship, and collaboration opportunities. Graduates often contribute to medical education and community health initiatives, reflecting the program's commitment to excellence in internal medicine.
