free community health worker training: Community-Based Health Interventions in an Institutional Context Steven L. Arxer, John W. Murphy, 2019-09-13 Community-Based Health Interventions in an Institutional Context examines challenges of institutionalizing community-based health care. While the community-based or localized model is growing in popularity and importance in the United States, in practice it must often be brought in to larger institutions in order to grow to scale. The typical goals of an institution—standardization, formalization, and control—may be seen as antithetical to those of a community-based healthcare provider, such as spontaneity, customization, and flexibility. The contributions to this work raise questions about how the community-based model can be scaled up through institutions, and how institutionalization can be rethought from a bottom-up approach. They provide not only an overview of community-based organizations, but also delve into practical topics such as establishing budgets, training workers, incorporating technology, as well as more theoretical topics like goal-setting, policy effects (like the ACA), and relationships between patient and community. This work will be of interest for researchers interested in exploring the community-based health care model, as well as practitioners in health care and health policy.

free community health worker training: Caring Cash Tom Neumark, 2023-02-20 Anthropological study of the impact of cash grants on the economic dynamics and relationships among Kenya's urban poor The idea of giving cash, no-strings-attached, to the poor has become popular in the 21st century. While hardly a radical form of global redistribution, these cash grants, often known as unconditional cash transfers, claim to offer a new type of care that is less paternalistic than other forms of assistance. Caring Cash explores the caring practices that these grant experiments produced in the Nairobi ghetto of Korogocho. After receiving the grants, people there did not only look after themselves and their family, friends, lovers, clients, and patrons but also maintained the bonds that held them all together. Putting his interlocutors' lives in conversation with ideas around care, ethics, and economies, Tom Neumark argues that for those in the ghetto, caring for relationships is as important as the care that takes place within relationships. Seeing care in this way reveals the importance of managing one's proximity, distance, and detachment from others, and raises questions about the disquieting decisions that allow people to live together amidst violence and poverty.

free community health worker training: Research and Discussions in Critical Discourses and Remedies in Global Health Education Ashti A. Doobay-Persaud, Tracy L. Rabin, Tomlin Paul, Jessica Evert, Benedicta Ayiedu Mensah, 2024-10-01 Global Health, a field of study, research and practice defined in 2009 with precursors in international health and development, is currently reckoning with itself. The field has well-intended goals emphasizing collaboration and dialogue between population health, public health, clinical care, and other disciplines to address socioeconomic determinants of health, and employing interdisciplinary approaches to address health inequities wherever they exist. Despite these lofty ideals, there are concerns that the field itself has historically served to reinforce rather than deconstruct colonialism and power imbalances. At this point in time, the field has evolved toward a vision of a community of practice between institutions across the income spectrum (HIC, LMIC, LIC) working in bidirectional and multidirectional ways to develop staff, stuff, space, systems and strategies to eliminate health disparities. However, with deeply rooted colonial assumptions, racism, elitism, and other forms of bias underlying institutions and individuals, initiatives operating under the auspices of Global Health are all too often antithetical to the pursuit itself.

free community health worker training: Measles Threat Victor Healey, AI, 2025-03-19 Measles Threat investigates the concerning resurgence of measles in the 21st century, a highly contagious disease with potentially severe complications. Despite being preventable through vaccination, measles outbreaks continue, highlighting the critical need to understand the virus, its transmission, and the importance of immunization. This book provides a comprehensive, accessible overview of measles, emphasizing the science behind vaccination and its role in eradicating the disease, while focusing on the real-world impact of the disease and the effectiveness of public health interventions. The book explores the biology of the measles virus, the consequences of infection, and the efficacy and safety of the measles vaccine. A key insight is that while measles is preventable, low vaccination rates, often fueled by misinformation and vaccine hesitancy, allow it to persist. The book stresses that widespread vaccination remains the safest and most effective means of prevention, supported by data from organizations like the WHO and CDC. Beginning with a historical context of measles outbreaks and vaccine development, the book progresses through the virus's life cycle, clinical manifestations, vaccine science, and global status. It aims to equip readers with the knowledge to make informed decisions about vaccination and advocate for public health strategies, presenting a fact-based, balanced view of the risks and benefits of immunization, while addressing ongoing debates surrounding vaccine safety.

free community health worker training: Contraception across Cultures Andrew Russell, Mary Thompson, Elisa J. Sobó, 2020-06-04 Contraception is an issue of considerable concern to a great many heterosexually active people. Yet the impact of contraceptive technologies in the world today, in particular their implications for kinship, gender relations, and other aspects of social life, receives relatively little scholarly attention. This book brings a new perspective to the study of contraception, by collecting together in one volume leading experts in the fields of contraception, family planning and reproductive health. Contributors look at the social, economic, political and cultural contexts in which contraceptive providers and recipients make decisions about whether and what forms of contraception to use. User perspectives (whether those of recipients or providers of contraceptive services) are taken seriously, as are the perspectives of policy-makers and development experts. With its in-depth, case-study approach, this challenging book will appeal to practitioners and planners in the fields of family planning and reproductive health, as well as to students and academics of applied and medical anthropology, health studies, gender and development studies, or anyone interested in the social, cultural and ethical issues raised by contraceptive technologies.
