History and Formation of the Taos Society of Artists

The Taos Society of Artists was founded in 1915 by a group of artists who were captivated by the unique cultural and natural environment of Taos, New Mexico. This organization was created to promote the art that emerged from the region and to establish a formal collective that could advocate for the artists' work. The society was initially composed of seven founding members who had settled in Taos, drawn by the area's light, landscapes, and indigenous peoples. Their goal was to foster a community that encouraged artistic collaboration and increased public awareness of Southwestern art.

Origins and Motivations

The founding artists were motivated by a desire to break from traditional Eastern art centers and to explore a distinctly American artistic identity rooted in the Southwest. Taos offered a rich tapestry of subjects, including Native American culture, Spanish colonial heritage, and dramatic natural scenery. The society's formation marked a significant moment in American art history, as it highlighted the importance of regionalism and cultural specificity in artistic expression.

Early Development

Following its establishment, the Taos Society of Artists quickly gained recognition through exhibitions and critical acclaim. The society formalized its structure with bylaws and membership requirements, ensuring a high standard of artistic quality. Their exhibitions traveled across the United States, introducing broader audiences to Southwestern themes and styles. This early success helped secure Taos as an important art colony and paved the way for future generations of artists.

Notable Members and Their Contributions

The Taos Society of Artists boasted a group of highly skilled painters whose works have become emblematic of the Southwestern art movement. Each member brought a unique perspective, technique, and subject matter to the collective, enriching the society's overall impact.

Founding Members

The original seven artists who founded the society included:

- E. Irving Couse – Known for his sensitive portrayals of Native American life and landscapes.
- Joseph Henry Sharp – Recognized for his vivid depictions of Native American ceremonies and portraits.
- Oscar E. Berninghaus – Noted for his colorful landscapes and scenes of Taos Pueblo life.
- Walter Ufer – Celebrated for his dynamic and expressive paintings of indigenous subjects.
- Joaquin Mir Trinxet – A Spanish artist whose impressionistic style influenced the society.
- W. Herbert Dunton – Famous for his portrayals of cowboys and Western life.
- Ernest L. Blumenschein – A co-founder of the Taos art colony who captured the interplay of light and landscape.

Artistic Contributions

These artists collectively advanced the visual narrative of the American Southwest by creating paintings that highlighted the region's cultural richness and natural beauty. Their work often combined realism with impressionistic techniques, emphasizing vibrant color palettes and dramatic lighting. The members' commitment to authenticity and respect for indigenous cultures set their art apart from contemporaneous mainstream trends.

Artistic Style and Themes

The Taos Society of Artists developed a distinctive style that blended elements of realism, impressionism, and regionalism. Their paintings often focused on the interplay between light and landscape, the daily lives of Native Americans and Hispanic communities, and the rugged beauty of the Southwestern terrain.

Key Themes

The predominant themes explored by the society included:

- Indigenous culture and ceremonies
- Portraits of Native American and Hispanic individuals
- Southwestern landscapes and natural vistas
- Scenes of rural life and traditional customs
- Historic and spiritual elements of the region

Stylistic Characteristics

Their style was characterized by:

- Use of vibrant, earthy colors reflecting the Southwestern environment
- Strong emphasis on natural light and shadow
- Combination of detailed realism with impressionistic brushwork
- Focus on emotional depth and cultural authenticity

Exhibitions and Public Reception

The Taos Society of Artists played a crucial role in bringing Southwestern art to national attention through numerous exhibitions. Their shows were integral to the society's mission of promoting the unique artistic heritage of Taos and influencing American art trends.

Major Exhibitions

Between 1915 and 1927, the society organized annual exhibitions in prominent cities such as New York, Chicago, and San Francisco. These exhibitions showcased the works of the society's members and introduced a wider public to the cultural richness of the Southwest. The traveling exhibitions helped establish the reputations of individual artists and elevated the status of Southwestern art within the broader American art community.

Critical and Public Response

The society's exhibitions were met with critical acclaim for their authenticity, technical skill, and evocative portrayal of the Southwest. Art critics praised the society for capturing the spirit of the region and for contributing to the development of a distinctly American art form. The public reception was generally enthusiastic, leading to increased demand for Southwestern-themed art and encouraging other artists to explore the region.

Legacy and Influence on Contemporary Art

The impact of the Taos Society of Artists extends far beyond its active years. The society laid the foundation for Taos as a vibrant art colony and inspired generations of artists to explore regional and culturally specific subjects.

Enduring Influence

The society's commitment to depicting the Southwest with respect and artistic excellence has continued to resonate within the contemporary art world. Many modern artists and galleries in Taos and beyond draw inspiration from the themes and styles established by the society. Their work also helped popularize Southwest art as a significant genre within American art history.

Continued Recognition

Today, the Taos Society of Artists is celebrated through museum collections, retrospectives, and scholarly research. Their paintings are highly sought after by collectors and serve as cultural artifacts that document the history and heritage of the American Southwest. The society's legacy remains a testament to the power of place-based art and the value of artistic collaboration.

taos society of artists: The Taos Artists Response to Modernism Annette P. Musgrave, University of Houston--Clear Lake. School of Human Sciences and Humanities, 2011 This thesis fills the gap in our knowledge of the Taos Society of Artists, whose members forged exciting new directions that resulted in an authentic American art. The site of the first New Mexico art colony was in Taos. There, artists found a refuge where they could experiment and develop personal styles. The Taos Society of Artists was originally founded by Joseph Henry Sharp, Bert Geer Phillips, and Ernest L. Blumenschein. Within a few years Eanger Irving Couse, Oscar E. Berninghaus, William Herbert Dunton, Victor Higgins, and Walter Ufer joined the group. Histories of American art have largely neglected the important historical moment when American artists in the West moved away from classical artistic traditions into newer modern modes of painting. The lives and artworks of the Taos group form an essential chapter in the formation of American modernism. This thesis serves to begin the process of bridging the gap in American art history between classical and modern styles, from the art of masters such as Fredric Remington and Charles Russell to Georgia O'Keeffe and Maynard Dixon. While the subject of early Taos paintings may be viewed as simply western or Indian, their styles range from idealistic to realistic. From the inception of the Taos Society of Artists, influential patrons who played a large role in America's southwestern expansion valued their paintings and frequently paid large sums of money for them. In spite of their prominence, however, there is little or no information about the group in widely used art history textbooks. Art history classes taught at the college level typically do not include works by Taos artists or mention their important role in American art history. This thesis aims to fill the lack of scholarly literature and to demonstrate the importance of the Taos Society of Artists in American art history.

taos society of artists: Paintbrushes and Pistols Sherry Clayton Taggett, Ted Schwarz, 1990 Paintbrushes and Pistols is the story of an unusual alliance that changed the American West and American art at the turn of the century. It was an alliance between Ernest Blumenschein and other immature, naive men of great artistic talent who became known as the Taos Society of Artists, Fred Harvey, a genius in the field of food and lodging, and the promotion-minded men who operated the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fe Railroad. Together, they helped to create the westward migration that resulted in vast cities and smaller towns that exist today. And together, the highly eccentric members of the Taos Society of Artists - the last artists who would devote themselves to capturing the dying West on canves and in sculpture - radically changed styles of American fine art and commercial illustration.

taos society of artists: Eanger Irving Couse Virginia Couse Leavitt, 2019-01-24 Eanger Irving Couse (1866–1936) showed remarkable promise as a young art student. His lifelong interest in Native American cultures also started at an early age, inspired by encounters with Chippewa Indians living near his hometown, Saginaw, Michigan. After studying in Europe, Couse began spending summers in New Mexico, where in 1915 he helped found the famous Taos Society of Artists, serving as its first president and playing a major role in its success. This richly illustrated volume, featuring full-color reproductions of his artwork, is the first scholarly exploration of Couse's noteworthy life and artistic achievements. Drawing on extensive research, Virginia Couse Leavitt gives an intimate account of Couse's experiences, including his early struggles as an art student in the United States and abroad, his study of Native Americans, his winter home and studio in New York City, and his life in New Mexico after he relocated to Taos. In examining Couse's role as one of the original six founders of the Taos Society of Artists, the author provides new information about the art colony's early meetings, original members, and first exhibitions. As a scholar of art history, Leavitt has spent decades researching her subject, who also happens to be her grandfather. Her unique access to the Couse family archives has allowed her to mine correspondence, photographs, sketchbooks, and memorabilia, all of which add fresh insight into the American art scene in the early 1900s. Of particular interest is the correspondence of Couse's wife, Virginia Walker, an art student in Paris when the couple first met. Her letters home to her family in Washington State offer a vivid picture of her husband's student life in Paris, where Couse studied under the famous painter William Bouguereau at the Académie Julian. Whereas many artists of the early twentieth century pursued a radically modern style, Couse held true to his formal academic training throughout his career. He gained renown for his paintings of southwestern landscapes and his respectful portraits of Native peoples. Through his depictions of the domestic and spiritual lives of Pueblo Indians, Couse helped mitigate the prejudices toward Native Americans that persisted during this era.

taos society of artists: Ralph Meyers Julie Anderies Curator, 2015-10-07 At the heart of the vibrant cultural mix of the Taos Art Colony, in what may have been its most vibrant phase - the 'teens and 'twenties of the Twentieth Century - Indians, Spanish, Anglos and Europeans alike found Ralph Meyers (1885-1948). The first white man to establish trade with Taos Pueblo, he was also the guide and often the builder and outfitter for the members of the Taos Society of Artists. Fluent with all the cultures of Taos, he absorbed cultural traditions of woodcarving, silver smithing, beading, weaving, and leather working from native and Hispanic peoples with whom he maintained close relationships. Perhaps most remarkably, with no formal training in art and only a third grade education, he watched the academically trained artists from the eastern U.S., from Europe, and from Russia whom he guided into the mountains on sketching and camping trips and taught himself to paint... with such success that Leon Gaspard called him "one of the finest colorists in Taos." Scheduled to coincide with the 100th anniversary of the founding of the Taos Society of Artists, A Taos Original: Ralph Meyers, and the Taos Society of Artists, tells the compelling story of a self-taught, self-reliant outsider whose life and vision helped shaped the country's understanding of the West, and the world's understanding of American art.
