Understanding Tax Sale Overages

Tax sale overages, also known as surplus funds, arise when a property is sold at a tax sale for an amount exceeding the outstanding tax debt, fees, and costs. The excess money belongs to the former property owner, though many are unaware of its existence or the process required to claim it. Tax sale overages typically occur during tax lien sales or tax deed sales conducted by counties or municipalities to recover unpaid property taxes. Understanding the mechanics of these sales and how overages are generated is essential for anyone looking to capitalize on this niche market.

What Are Tax Sale Overages?

Tax sale overages represent the difference between the sale price of a property at a tax sale and the amount owed in taxes and associated costs. For example, if a property is sold for $50,000 but the outstanding tax debt is $40,000, the $10,000 surplus is the tax sale overage. These funds are held by the county or government entity until claimed by the rightful owner or lienholder. Due to lack of awareness or procedural difficulties, many former owners do not claim these funds, creating opportunities for trained investors or professionals.

Types of Tax Sales Generating Overages

There are primarily two types of tax sales where overages can occur:

- Tax Lien Sales: The government auctions tax liens to investors. If the lien is not redeemed, the investor may foreclose and sell the property, potentially generating overages.
- Tax Deed Sales: The government directly sells the property to satisfy unpaid taxes. Any amount exceeding the tax debt constitutes the overage.

Understanding these distinctions is crucial when pursuing tax sale overages through training programs.
